Battle Lunch—April 21st

George MacDonell is one of the last surviving members of 'C' Force, a battle group of about 2000 soldiers that the Canadian Government sent to Hong Kong in 1941 to reinforce the British garrison in Hong Kong prior to an attack by the Japanese after Pearl Harbour. The British and Canadians were overwhelmed by the size of the Japanese attack and in spite of mounting a heroic defence, the battle was over in about three weeks. The survivors were made prisoners of war and forced to work as slave labourers by the Japanese. They were subjected to appalling treatment for the next four years with the result that many did not survive their ordeal.

George will be accompanied by Jonathon Reid whose father, John Reid, was a Toronto doctor who volunteered for military service and was assigned to 'C' Force as a medical officer. Jonathon has written a book about his father's war service, "The Captain was a Doctor", that is due to be published later this year. Johnathon will provide some historical background to the Battle of Hong Kong and George will give a first person account of a young soldiers' experience of battle and his subsequent captivity.
